The Commissioner discussed the need for an established process including legislation, proper assessment, and placement.

Solutions needed. Apply resources affectively for structured services, affordable housing, growth preparation & public safety.

More than 100 people attended a suicide prevention town hall in Bunnell on Thursday, an opportunity to learn more about what’s driving Flagler County’s suicide rate.

BUNNELL — After Dr. Deanna Oleske became an associate medical examiner for Flagler and two neighboring counties in 2016 she made a troubling discovery.

Flagler residents were statistically more likely to die by suicide, overdose or fire.

“Since 2012, the county of Flagler, which has 106,000 people, has had 320 suicides. It’s a prevention town hall Thursday night in Bunnell.

At first, she said the situation in Flagler shocked her. In fact, a lot of overdose in Flagler lag behind the numbers of people taking it seriously in the county, there are five suicides.

At Flagler’s 1st-Ever Suicide Town Hall, Hope and Resolve Confront Grim Void of Mental Health Services
